

For the last five weeks I've been going to GAGAL. I don't know why we're going to GAGAL because I was away on a cruise when it was explained.

I was really excited when I found out we were going to GAGAL, because my dad Greg, was an employee at GAGAL, I always used to go to try-a-trade, plus I loved doing try-a-trade.

The projects I've been doing are a tow truck, a planter box, a name block and a jewellery box. I'm really looking forward to making the clock.

I love going to GAGAL because it's a great experience to use different tools like a hammer, disc sander, drill press, electric drill, paint brush, electric screw driver, nail punch and a jig.

The main safety equipment is, bright shirts, glasses, closed in shoes, gloves and no jewellery.

The material that we need is usually, a pencil, ruler, wood, paint, glue, tiles, nails and screws.

The thing I learnt was what GAGAL stands for, it stands for Gladstone Area Group Apprentices Limited. I learnt not to choke the hammer, I always used to though! I learnt that cm do not exist only mm and m exist in the building industry.

I wrote a big thank-you letter to Rio-Tinto, because they donated some money so we didn't have to pay for GAGAL.

The rules at GAGAL are very simple, they're just like listen to the teacher and put your hand up if you want to say something, and stuff like that.

Every-thing I learnt is stuck in my brain now and I couldn't get it out even if I wanted to.

Going to GAGAL is like a dream come true, because I love GAGAL. Thank-you.
